

The disability lens

Last month, we told you about an emancipatory research approach used by the CDPA, called the Learning Collaborative. There are also two additional “signature methodologies” used in the work of the Alliance, that will be the focus for this month’s and next month’s postings.

In an effort to assist policy makers and policy analysts to reflect on the adequacy of policy for disabled Canadians, we developed the Disability Lens, a series of questions derived from “Tips for policy analysis” (in McColl & Jongbloed, 2006. Disability and social policy in Canada (2nd ed.)) These questions are intended to provide a quick, easy guide to assessing the important implications of policy decisions for people with disabilities.

For more information about the Disability Lens, click here.

